

MAKE A CRUCIAL CATCH

Screening can catch breast cancer early.

Hundreds of thousands of women battle breast cancer every year, but they are not fighting the disease on their own. The NFL is working to raise breast cancer awareness on the football field, and together with the American Cancer Society Cancer Action Network, the two groups are engaging Congress in the fight. Federal efforts such as the National Breast and Cervical Cancer Early Detection Program have provided nearly 10 million lifesaving breast and cervical cancer screenings to uninsured and underinsured women. But fewer than 1 in 5 eligible women can access the program at current funding levels. Detecting breast cancer early leads to less expensive treatment and a greater chance of survival – let's ensure that more women have access to the cancer screenings they need.

Support funding for lifesaving breast cancer screenings.
